We talked back in October 2010 about pre-publication review on my new book, [REDACTED]
[REDACTED]. I've just finished the latest draft (attached above in a zipped file).
The document is in Microsoft Word.

Hello [REDACTED]

Thanks for the compliment. The version you have is still pretty raw but the content is locked down which is why I decided to send it on up to you guys. Regarding psuedonyms for the Bureau people, I did a little of both. Early on I started using psuedoyms but it got hard to keep track of the aliases and keep the context accurate during re-writes. To deal with this I decided to temporarily go with the real names until I got to the pre-publication review stage. That way it was clear who was who w/o me having to constantly use my cheat sheet.

Other than the above exceptions, in the manuscript version you currently have, all the Bureau people have real names used. I have a cheat-sheet with a list of psuedonyms so switching them out will be a snap.

Thanks for the update,

Just wanted to touch base on your manuscript. I'm reading it now and it's very well written. I have one question so far... when you mention folks in the Bureau, did you use their real names or did you use pseudonyms?

I should have a list of the names in question as I finish my review, hopefully later this week.

Thanks for your help.

Thanks [redacted]

I appreciate you touching base with me. Also thanks for informing me of the turn-around time policy. I was wondering about that.

Please note: The reference to [redacted] in the sub-title is removed. I was contemplating mentioning [redacted] toward the end of the book, then decided against it for simplicity purposes. The new working sub-title should read:

Hi [redacted]

My name is [redacted] I have taken over for [redacted] on a full time basis doing Prepublication review. I just wanted to write to acknowledge that [redacted] has forwarded me your e-mail concerning your book. I am very much looking forward to reading it.

~~I'm not sure if~~ [redacted] mentioned but we do have a 30 working day review policy. Most of the time we get our review done within that time frame, but depending on the complexities of a case, they may go over.

Feel free to contact me if you have any further questions.
